CHENNAI: Under intense pressure from the country's top scientists, Union environment minister Jairam Ramesh will visit the proposed neutrino lab site at Singara, a hamlet in the periphery of the Mudumalai tiger reserve, in the first half of October. The lab will study neutrinos, the smallest particles known to humans.

The visit assumes significance in the backdrop of stiff opposition from the Tamil Nadu government to the proposed site.

Ramesh, who has already been advised by the Bombay Natural History Society against locating the India-based Neutrino Observatory (INO) in Mudumalai, in the Nilgiris biosphere in the Western Ghats, told TOI over phone on Thursday: "We need a neutrino lab and Singara is the best location." Adding that he would visit the site next month, Ramesh said: "I have also asked the scientific community to think of alternate sites."
